TELEPHONE ADDITIONS AND EXTENSIONS TO COST $110,000,000 IN NEXT FIVE YEARS

By W. R. Abbott, President, Illinois Bell Telephone Company

The Illinois Bell Telephone Company will expend more than $110,000,000 in the next five years to build extensions and additions to its plant to supply the demands for additional telephone service from the citizens of Illinois.

During 1924 the company appropriated, for this work, a total of $22,810,360. It will have to expend more than this in 1925 and each of the years to follow.

One of the peculiarities of the telephone business, and where it differs from almost any other, is that the more business the telephone company does the greater the cost per unit of service becomes. More telephones mean additional calls and larger equipment and additional employees to handle.

Average Investment Higher

In 1920 the company's average investment per telephone was $125. In 1924 this had risen to $145, and it is estimated that in 1925 this will be $175.

The company is powerless to control these advances. Much of the plant was built at pre-war prices for labor and materials. It is now being added to and replaced at present day costs for labor and materials, which makes a much higher average investment per telephone than the investment used in determining the present rates for service.

With this mounting investment every year, telephone rates must keep pace.

Need for Reserve

Nineteen twenty-four brought out, in violent way, the need of the company maintaining a proper depreciation reserve. A few days before Christmas, Illinois was visited by a severe sleet storm.

Within a few hours damage of more than $1,000,000 has been suffered by the telephone plant. More than 21,000 poles were on the ground in various parts of the state, and toll and long distance service was considerably hampered.

A depreciation reserve represents one of the costs of providing telephone service, and it takes a costly storm like the one mentioned to point out to the public what some of the costs of telephone service are.

Nurse's Error Killed Patient, Doctor Declares

Dr. John Lancaster, head of the Southern hospital, and famed for his operation of arterial exsection, places all responsibility for the death of a patient, whose identity is being kept a secret, on the clumsiness of Joan Wentworth, a young nurse who assisted him during the operation.

Failure of Miss Wentworth in the performance of certain duties at a crucial moment during the operation was given by the famous surgeon as the direct cause of death. Hospital authorities state that the young nurse has been suspended, pending action of the board of control. Miss Wentworth has denied the charges.

Surgeons and medical students from many parts of the country had gathered in the operating theater to witness Doctor Lancaster in the performance of the operation for which he is noted.

Miss Wentworth explained that it was her first morning of surgical work and that, although the anesthesia had made her ill, it in no way affected her efficiency in the minor capacity she occupied during the operation.

"Why Doctor Lancaster should blame me for the failure is a mystery to me," she declared. "I cannot say more, however, until a definite charge is made."

Miss Wentworth has been a student nurse at the Southern hospital for several months and was to have been graduated in a few weeks. All hope for diploma will be shattered, she said, if the charges are upheld.

What happened to Joan? Were the charges proved true? Follow up this interesting situation which takes place in the opening chapter of "The Truant Soul," a thrilling mystery-love story which is to run serially in The News-Bulletin beginning with the next issue.

Tinley To Open New $33,000.00 School Monday

Tinley Park's new $33,000 public school will be opened for school purposes for the first time next Monday morning. The new structure contains six rooms and is modern in every way. It is built of brick and concrete and is as nearly fire proof as it is possible to make a building.

One of the features of the new building is a play ground in the basement fitted up with sand piles, etc., for the little tots to play in during cold or inclement weather.

At present this school has three teachers and an enrollment of 150 pupils. Reservations have been made for the future needs of the school by extra room space so that it will answer the needs of the community for years to come.

The old school building which is standing along side of the new structure is to be sold.

THE CLEARING HOUSE

Editor Clearing House:-

The crime wave that has been sweeping this country can to a large extent be traced to the ease with which mere kids can purchase guns or rats by mail. The cheap 10 and 25c a year magazines are loaded with advertisements from various gun manufacturing concerns or tributors who offer to send guns as low as $5 by mail. This times arouses some cracked nuts to start on a hold up etc. and perhaps the first stickup if them more than the initial ion.

A law should be passed to make it a penalty for any paper or magazine to advertise fine arms.

There is one healthy sign which shows that big business concerns look at the matter in the same light as outlined above for recently one of the biggest mail order houses in the country, namely, Sears Roebuck and Company, decided as a free and voluntary act to withdraw the handling of fire arms, even tho it meant a loss of thousands of dollars yearly to do so.

We hope that our legislators will get their eyes opened and pass laws that will make it high impossible for anyone to get a fire arm and when this is done, manufacturers will not wax rich in making big sales of their deadly weapons to thieves and murderers.

Raney's Hall, at Orland Burns Result of Overheated Furnace

Raney's Hall at Orland was destroyed by fire Wednesday evening, entailing a loss of $3,000 covered by insurance. As a New Year's affair was planned to take place in the hall the night of the fire, the furnace was well heated to warm the hall and it is thought became overheated and caused the blaze which spread quickly and, altho the Orland Volunteer Fire Department quickly responded, the building was beyond saving and burned to the ground. The new water mains which were laid to Mr. Raney's subdivision last fall were given their first real hard test and are said to have proved very satisfactory.

Mr. Raney's hall had been filling long felt want in Orland and was in constant demand. It is only felt by the community. It is said that Mr. Raney will rebuild the hall.

Mr. Raney figures his loss at $5,000. Besides the hall a new piano, furnace and many other articles burned. Mr. Raney had just ordered 125 pairs of roller skates, thinking he would convert his hall into skating rink.

Rock Island Wreck Is Cleaned Up

The Rock Island has been keeping a large force of men and a wrecking outfit and a steam shovel busy for several days clearing up the debris caused by the big wreck at Midlothian last Wednesday morning when 17 cars of an east bound freight train were wrecked when a broken arch fell into a switch point just west of the Midlothian depot and as the train was running at a high rate of speed, 17 cars were piled up before the train came to a stop. The cars for the most part were loaded with coal which was scattered all over the right of way, blocking both main tracks. One coal car was thrown directly across the west main so that all traffic on both tracks was tied up. After several hours of hard work the west bound main was cleared and was used for several days until the east main could be repaired and opened for traffic. This was quite a costly wreck, but luckily no one was hurt.

and car dealers in the village who have a salesroom in connection with their garage will be given a distinctive card and under it, the dealer may test or demonstrate different successive cars during the year.

The penalty clause of this ordinance provides for a minimum fine of $5 and a maximum fine of $100 for violation of said ordinance.

The city dads hope to add between $400 and $500 to the village treasury when this ordinance is in operation.

August Hentsch To Erect New Fire Proof Garage

Another new business, is to be opened in Mokena this spring, when August Hentsch opens his new garage.

Mr. Hentsch is contemplating erecting a modern fire proof garage building soon as the weather will permit. The new structure is to be located on the property occupied by Mr. Hentsch's son Fred, and will be 100 feet long by 50 feet wide and is to be built of brick. The window frames are to be of steel and the floors of concrete, thus making an absolute fire proof building.

A large show room for displaying cars will be one of the features of the proposed new garage. There will be ample room for storing cars and a big roomy shop for repair work. Mr. Hentsch says he expects to have the new building fully completed by the end of May.

THE RED LINE TRAIL

By

Borne across the water came the creak of blocks and the rattle of oars, followed by heavy splashes, as the boats struck the water. Then they shot away from the ship and vanished into the shoreward shadows.

"They've separated," muttered Lord George. "They're going in three different directions. And they're pulling fast. Listen to them. They're—By Jove, Archman. I've guessed it. Somebody's escaped and they're after him. Maybe it's your daughter and Bunker. Bunker has found a way."

The sound of the oars did indeed show that the boats had separated widely. To right and to left the creaking had grown fainter. But directly in front it had grown louder.

Lord George noticed it and jumped. "One of them's coming here!" he cried. "We've got to do something, quick. Hello! What's that?"

From immediately behind a rattle of oars had sounded. Simultaneously Olaf spoke. "Our boat. She comes!" he said.

A boat, with a lantern and a reflector at the bow, had shot into sight behind the three men.

Archman sprang toward it with an exclamation. "Just in time!" he cried. "Lord George, call your party down. Don't lose a minute. We must get the women to safety." He turned again to the boat. "Turn around, quick!" he ordered. "Come along the bank and wait." Once more he faced toward the slope, up which Lord George was hurrying. "Quick! For heaven's sake, back!" he called.

But Lord George was already at the top of the alarm, and the next moment the party came plunging down the slope.

Lord George himself led the way, following Miss Denslow's footsteps and putting her toppling over every treacherous break in the path. Behind him came Harry Archman, steady as a rock as well as he could on the steep pathway. The poor lady was half aroused from her swoon by the sight of her husband's face.

Lord George was waiting for her, and she was waiting for him. The two men's eyes met, and they both saw the other's perhaps overoptimistic expressions that her troubles were over.

Behind her came Bess, and the rear was brought up by Collins, who had come up, panting, just in time to join the rest. As he took the first step of the descent, the moon, slipping above the last screening peak, illuminated the mountainside and all of the water except a narrow band close to the shore. In the refulgence the boat from the El Rio stood plainly out. The ravine itself escaped the direct rays, but its details became faintly visible by the reflected light.

At the bottom of the slope, beside the flat rock where Lord George had first halted, lay a broad, shallow boat, beside which Archman stood waiting.

Mrs. Archman tottered into his arms. "Henry! Henry!" she sobbed.

Archman patted her on the back. "That's all right, mother!" he said. "All right! Everything's all right." His breath caught as he remembered Nellie, but he went on bravely. "Get into the boat," he begged. "We've got no time to lose. Quick, quick!"

Lord George glanced about him, taking in details which had before been invisible in the gloom. The ravine was not a real ravine. It was merely a recess or inlet between high, rocky slopes. It ended abruptly half a dozen feet back from where he stood, in a precipitous wall of rock in which gaped the black face of a cave. The rescuing boat had come out of this and was going back into it.

Lord George glanced at his companions. Obviously they were more than the boat would hold. And the mutineers were very near. He spun around.

"Here, boys—whatever your names are—come! We'll hold the entrance." He started toward the sea.

"Wait, wait!" Archman's call was quick. "We'll hold them, but not just here. Come. I will show you!" He pushed the boat off and the two oarsmen, poling with their oars, drove it beneath the black archway of the cavern. Then he turned. "Follow me," he ordered, and stepped into a narrow, almost unnoticable ledge of rock that ran along the side of the entrance to the cave.

Half out of sight he turned and beckoned. "Come!" he urged; and vanished into the blackness. With a shrug of his shoulders Lord George followed.

A moment later, looking out of the darkness, he saw the mutineers' boat shoot into the mouth of the outlet.

Simultaneously a pistol cracked behind him and one of the rowers jumped convulsively and then fell sideways into the boat; and the others, without orders, backed water desperately.

Then Archman spoke. "That will hold them for a while," he rasped. "Till daylight, anyway, I think. It is not long till then. When they do come we shall be ready for them."

CHAPTER XVII

The Attack.

The dawn came slowly up behind the mountain. The pallid stars winked out and the streak of placid water reaching from the cave to the bay silvered in the growing light. The bay itself glowed pink and the far islands that lay to the west swam slowly into sight, like a picture on a film in the developing tray.

Inside the cave, Lord George, who with Archman had watched the night away from a broad shelf of rock that faced the entrance across the curving tidal stream, rose and stretched himself. "I'm going to reconnoiter," he said.

Archman nodded invisibly in the darkness. "I was just thinking of going myself," he said. "But perhaps you can do it better. You are younger and more active. But you will be careful. Eight men are none too many to defend even so strong a place as this."

"I'll be careful," Lord George was already sidling along the narrow edge.

In a moment he was at the entrance and was peering cautiously about in the white dawn. Up and down the cut he looked, scanning the sloping sides, which were not nearly so precipitous as they had seemed when he descended them in the gloom of the night. Long he stared, straining his ears the while for any sound that might tell that the mutineers were lurking near, watching a chance to take the defenders by surprise. But neither eyes nor ears gave warning and at last he slipped from the entrance to the rock landing. Still no sign of danger presented itself.

He had two places to investigate—the mouth of the inlet and the crest of the ravine. The attack might come by boat from the one or it might come by land over the other. But Lord George knew that an attack by boat must be slower than one by land, and that the mutineers would not wait for him to reconnoiter both land and sea.

Therefore he turned his face to the slope and began to ascend. He moved swiftly. Swiftly was his best protection, as concealment on the bare rocks was impossible. Up the slope he bounded till almost at the top. Then he stopped and lifted his head cautiously above the edge. Then he started; his eyes expanded; his ready automatic flashed up.

He found himself looking squarely into the muzzle of another pistol, held by a man who, prone upon his stomach, had just crawled to the edge and was looking over. For a moment death for one or both hung in the balance. Then Lord George lowered his pistol. "Don't shoot!" he said. "I'm a friend!" Behind the other he had seen an orderly line of men who were assuredly not mutineers.

As the other hesitated, Lord George stood up, slipping his pistol back into his pocket as he did so. "Who's in command?" he demanded.

An officer came forward promptly and saluted. "Lord George Caruthers?" he questioned. "I am Captain Strindberg, of the Danish navy, commanding a detachment from my majesty's ship Falsberg. I have heard of you from Captain Bunker of the El Rio. I have three of your party with me." He gestured toward Nellie, Carr and Bunker, who were hurrying forward.

Lord George glanced at them, recognizing Bunker and guessing who Nellie was. Then he looked back to Strindberg. "Glad to meet you, captain," he said. "I suppose Captain Bunker has told you everything. Have you seen anything of the mutineers?"

"They have just left the El Rio and are heading this way—three boats of them, about forty men in all. They seem to meditate an attack in force. Mr. Archman and the others are with you."

"Yes; in a cave in the bottom of the ravine here." Lord George stepped past the officer. "Good morning, Captain Bunker," he said, holding out his hand. "You came in good time. I suppose this is Miss Archman?" He held out his hand to the girl. "Your father is terribly anxious about you," he added.

Nellie nodded. "Poor father!" she breathed. "I'm sorry, sorrier than I can say. This is Mr. Carr, Lord George. How is my mother?"

"Mrs. Archman and the rest are well. They are waiting below. I beg your pardon, captain?"

Strindberg was plucking the Englishman by the arm. "The boats approach quickly," he said. "Perhaps you will lead the way down the slope. I want not that your friends should shoot my men, not knowing that they are friends."

"Quite right," Lord George turned toward the ravine. Then he paused. "If I may suggest, captain, we have seven men below in a strong position. Why not keep your force up here till the mutineers attack and then take them in the rear?"

Strindberg drew himself up. "I have arranged that some stay, my lord," he said stiffly. "Be pleased to descend."

With a nod of compliance, Lord George started downward, followed by Nellie and the rest.

Archman was standing in the archway, looking eagerly out. At sight of Nellie he sprang forward with a cry, which the girl echoed gladly. Then he started and thrust her behind him as he saw the sailors descending the slope.

Strindberg stopped and saluted formally. "Captain Strindberg, of the Danish navy, Mr. Archman," he said. "Is his highness here?"

Archman hesitated. "His highness is not far away, captain," he said slowly.

"Good! You will take me to him so soon as I have ended this mutiny? Please lead the way into your cave." The captain spoke authoritatively.

Nellie had already vanished into the archway and Lord George and Carr were following. Archman, with a bow to Strindberg, slipped in and the others came swiftly after.

Obedient to quick orders the half dozen civilian defenders evacuated their post along the shelf of rock that faced the entrance, giving place to the sailors. Nellie had gone farther back to where Archman was waiting. The others at Strindberg's request moved to one side, out of range of possible bullets. "Now we will wait," said the captain. "We prepare our surprise for the mutineers, so!"

The preparations were finished none too soon. As the captain faced the now vivid opening of the arch, the first boat of the mutineers swung in at the mouth of the inlet and came on with a rush. Behind it, an instant later, the others approached. "Halt!" Strindberg's voice trumpeted from the archway.

A chorus of shouts answered. Above them rose Price's voice. "Rush 'em, boys. Rush 'em. Quick! Stroke! Stroke!"

Strindberg stepped aside. "Fire!" he ordered calmly; and from the line of Danish marines sped a whirlwind of bullets.

Under the attackers reeled. Half the men in the first boat fell from their seats. But from the stern sheets a dozen rifles answered, spitting lead into the darkness. Simultaneously, the second boat, veering to the right, sped past.

Again came the calm order "Fire!" and again the sailors' rifles flamed.

The starboard oarsmen in the second boat caught the fire and dropped, their useless oars trailing in the water. The boat, driven by the port oars only, veered across the channel and sped past.

Attackers had had enough. Yells to "back water" rose and the third boat began to slip away. Simultaneously Strindberg's voice rang out. "Surrender!" he called. "Look above you—and look behind."

The mutineers looked. Above them, at the top of the ravine, stood the rest of the Danes, and behind them were two boats filled with sailors in the uniforms of the Danish navy. Strindberg had laid his trap well.

CHAPTER XVIII

The Only Answer.

The fight had come too swiftly to permit much interchange of comment among the reunited civilians. Mrs. Archman and Bess and Miss Denslow had flatly refused to go on to the refuge that Archman had told them was waiting for them and had insisted on staying near their menfolk.

News of Nellie's venture on board the El Rio was kept from them, Archman explaining only that the girl was safe and would be with them soon. The outbreak of the fighting, almost instantly after she did arrive, prevented questions.

Once the battle was over, however, explanations were in order. They were precipitated by Carr, who came toward the group from near the entrance. "It's all over!" he called. "They've surrendered."

"Oh! I'm so glad," Nellie caught her mother by the arm and fairly ran her to the light. "Come to the—er—door, please, mother," she cried, "so that you can see Jim. He's going to be your son-in-law, you know."

"Son-in-law!" the lady gasped. "Why! Why!" She studied Carr's face in the greater light. "Why, he's the carpenter man on the boat!"

Nellie had the grace to blush, but she quickly recovered herself. "Of course, he is," she said. "I didn't know you'd seen him—though I don't know how you could help noticing him. Yes! He's Mr. Carr—James Carr."

The young man grinned. "Not Carr exactly," he explained. "Van Kull, son of your neighbor, Nicholas Van Kull, who made Miss Archman's acquaintance while shipbuilding in his father's repair docks. Father insisted that I should learn to earn my own living; and I guess I have. I was known at the docks as Jim Carr."

Lesson for January 11

THE JUDGMENT OF THE NATIONS

GOLDEN TEXT—Matt. 25:31-46.
GOLDEN TEXT—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."—Matt. 25:40.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Kindness Pleases.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Christ's Picture of Judgment.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Practical Christianity.

The subject selected by the lesson committee is "The Last Judgment," but this is an error. According to legitimate textual and contextual significance it is the judgment of the living nations which still lies in the future (v. 32). The idea of a general judgment which is of such frequent occurrence in religious literature and teaching is a fundamental error. It is not once found in the Bible, neither the idea which it is intended to convey. Doctor Pentecost most truthfully says, "It is a mischievous habit that has led the Christian world to speak of the judgment as being one great event taking place at the end of the world when all human beings, saints and sinners, Jews and Gentiles, the living and the dead, shall stand up before the great white throne and there be judged. Nothing can be more wide of the Scriptures." The Bible speaks of several judgments, different in respect to the subjects to be judged, the place of judgment, the time of judgment and the result of judgment.

I. The Judge (v. 31).

It is the Son of God who came and died to redeem the human race. He is now seen clothed with majesty and power sitting upon His throne acting as Judge. Those who accept Jesus Christ now as their Savior shall not come into judgment (John 5:24).

II. The Time (v. 31).

This judgment will take place when the Lord comes in His glory accompanied with a retinue of glorious angels. This will take place after He has gathered the elect remnant of Israel. There will be no resurrection in connection with this judgment.

III. The Place (v. 31).

The prophecy of Joel, the third chapter, and Zechariah 14:1-5, show that it is to be in or near Jerusalem. The angel said to Mary, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest."

And the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of His kingdom there shall be no end." (Luke 1:31-33). As David was a literal king and reigned in a literal place, there shall be a literal judge occupying a literal place of judgment.

IV. The People Judged (vv. 32-45).

These will be the living nations upon earth after the church has been translated (I Thess. 4:16, 17). These are nations to whom the gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached just prior to the coming of the end. "And this gospel of the Kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." (Matt. 24:14). This gospel is distinct from the grace of God, which is now being preached. The preachers of this gospel will be the Jews (see Revelation 7 and Romans 11). These are the brethren of the Lord in the flesh who move among the nations of the world with the startling message of the news of the Lord's approaching kingdom. Some of the nations will gladly receive the message and kindly receive the kingdom messengers, giving them clothing, food, shelter, etc. Others will persecute them, thrusting them into prison. Here the first will visit the messengers of the King and provide for their wants. At this time the Judge will separate the nations, placing the sheep on the right and the goats on the left hand. The sheep are those who have given proper treatment to Christ's brethren. The goats are those who rejected and mistreated his brethren. If these three classes, the sheep, the goats and the brethren be kept separate, all confusion will be avoided.

V. The Issue of the Judgment (v. 46; Cf. vv. 34-41).

1. The Sheep Entering into the Inheritance of a Prepared Kingdom.

2. The Goats Going into Everlasting Fire Prepared for the Devil and His Angels (v. 46). This judgment shall determine their destiny.

Health and good looks —the reward of internal cleanliness.

IF YOU do not keep clean internally your looks and health are undermined together. A clogged intestine breeds poisons that reach every part of the body. These poisons ruin the complexion and undermine health. Constipation brings on such ailments as headaches, bilious attacks and insomnia, each of which saps your health and vitality.

Avoid Laxatives—say Doctors
Laxatives and cathartics do not overcome constipation, says a noted authority, but by their continued use tend only to aggravate the condition.

Medical science has found at last in lubrication a means of overcoming constipation. The gentle lubricant, Nujol, penetrates and softens the hard food waste and thus hastens its passage through and out of the body. Nujol is not a medicine or laxative and cannot gripe. Like pure water, it is harmless.

Take Nujol regularly and adopt this habit of internal cleanliness. For sale by all druggists.

Finally Found Health by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Columbia, S. C.—"Your medicine has done me so much good that I feel like I owe my life to it. For three years I was sick and was treated by physicians, but they didn't seem to help me any. Then I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got strong enough to do my housework, where before I was hardly able to be up. I have also taken the Vegetable Compound during the Change of Life and it has left me in good health. I recommend it as the best medicine for women in the Change of Life and you can use these facts as a testimonial."—Mrs. S. A. HOLLEY, R. F. D. No. 4, Columbia, South Carolina.

Why suffer for years with backache, nervousness, painful times and other ailments common to women from early life to middle age, when Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will bring relief? Take it when annoying symptoms first appear and avoid years of suffering.

In a recent country-wide canvass of purchasers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over 200,000 replies were received, and 98 out of every 100 reported they were benefited by its use.

Originally "Jaws' Harp"

The name, jaws' harp, is probably a corruption of the original name of this simple musical instrument, jaws' harp, so called because when in use it is held between the jaws. A musician named Charles Eulenstein produced remarkable effects with jaws' harps at the Royal Institute, London, on February 15, 1828.

Weakening Night Coughing Banished Very Simple Way

It is really astonishing how a persistent, exasperating cough that has kept you awake night after night, and is rapidly wearing you down is usually stopped short by a very simple method. Hundreds have found that they can sleep the whole night through undisturbed often the first time they try it.

The method is based on a remarkable prescription known as Dr. King's New Discovery for Coughs. You simply take a teaspoonful at night before retiring and hold it in your throat for 15 or 20 seconds before swallowing, without following with water. The prescription has a double action. It not only soothes and loosens and removes the phlegm and congestion which are the direct cause of the coughing. Getting at the cause like this, in a perfectly simple way, it stops the spell almost instantly, you get your best night's rest perhaps in weeks, and in a very short time the whole cough condition is gone.

This simple treatment is splendid not only for coughs and colds, but also for bronchitis, bronchial asthma, hoarseness and almost every kind of throat irritation, including children's whooping cough. Very economical too, as the dose is only one teaspoonful. On sale at all good druggists. Ask for

Dangerous Coughs Go Quickly With Old- Time Pine-Tar Honey

Perhaps the best remedy ever discovered for a persistent cough that has hung on and on, and which may develop into a more serious condition, is that old-time tried and proved medicine that our parents and grandparents relied on—Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar Honey. The prompt relief is almost magical, and a day's use will often break up a bad cough or chest cold entirely. Doctors say the pine tar quickly loosens and removes the phlegm and congestion which are the direct cause of the cough, also healing soreness, while the honey both soothes irritation and gives a pleasant taste.

But be sure you get the genuine and original Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar Honey, and no other. There have been many imitations, but the original is still the best, as it is scientifically compounded of just the right proportions of pine-tar, honey and other healing ingredients which the best doctors have found to aid in quick relief. For coughs, chest colds, bronchitis and almost every other throat irritation, including children's spasmodic croup. Often stops a severe cough overnight. Dr. Bell's is only 50c at any good drugstore.

HOW TO SOLVE A CROSS-WORD PUZZLE

When the correct letters are placed in the white spaces this puzzle will spell words both vertically and horizontally. The first letter in each word is indicated by a number, which refers to the definition listed below the puzzle. Thus No. 1 under the column headed "horizontal" defines a word which will fill the white spaces up to the first black square to the right, and a number under "vertical" defines a word which will fill the white squares to the next black one below. No letters go in the black spaces. All words used are dictionary words, except proper names. Abbreviations, slang, initials, technical terms and obsolete forms are indicated in the definitions.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

DR. FREDERICK R. GREEN
Editor of "HEALTH"

WHY SOME GERMS ARE INVISIBLE

THE British Association for the Advancement of Science met this year in Toronto, Canada. This is one of the few times when this dignified body of English scientific men has met on this side of the Atlantic. The president, Sir David Bruce, K. C. B., F. R. S., took for his presidential address, the important and practical subject, "The Prevention of Disease."

Of all the instruments which the mind and ingenuity of man has developed, the microscope, he said, is the most important. With it, in the last 50 years, the cause of almost all diseases caused by minute living things has been discovered. But there are a number of common and destructive diseases which are undoubtedly caused by germs which have never been seen by the human eye. This is not because they do not exist but probably because they are so small that not even the most powerful microscope is strong enough to make them visible. Influenza, measles and scarlet fever have all the peculiarities of germ diseases, yet, so far, no germs have been found which are, beyond doubt, the causes of these diseases. Smallpox is perhaps the most typical germ disease known, yet no one has ever been able to find its cause. Foot-and-mouth disease among animals is clearly due to some germ, yet no one knows what it is.

The generally accepted and probable explanation of this strange situation is that the germs responsible for these diseases are not only too small to be seen by the microscope but are also so small that they will pass freely through the finest filter made, and so cannot be "strained out," cultivated and examined as can the larger and more generally known germs.

An invisible germ cannot be studied. This means that until a germ is made visible, there is no way of knowing where it can be found in the body, how it affects the various organs, how it gets out of the body or in what form, what it lives on outside the body, whether it is carried by other animals or insects, how it gets back to the human body and how it can be controlled and the infection of healthy persons be avoided.

One hundred years ago, smallpox and yellow fever were equally mysterious. No one knew the cause of either disease. No one knew whether they were carried by animals or insects, whether contact with the sick person would cause it.

Today, we know that only mosquitoes can carry yellow fever, so we disregard everything else in controlling this disease. We suspect everything about a smallpox patient, just as our forefathers did 100 years ago.

Some day, the germ of smallpox will be found and then it will be as easy to stamp out this disease as it is to control yellow fever.

FOOLING THE MALARIA BUGS

LONG before the transmission of malaria by mosquitoes was discovered, it was known that chills and fever disappeared in the fall after the first frost and that no new cases appeared until warm weather came the next spring. We know now that cold weather kills the mosquitoes, so there is no way by which the disease can be transmitted until the new generation of mosquitoes hatch out. But this rule, like all generalizations, has exceptions. Occasionally, there occurs in the spring, long before the breeding season for mosquitoes, a single case of malaria, what doctors call a "sporadic case."

Why do these solitary cases occur and how can they happen when there were no mosquitoes present? They would seem to prove that the mosquito is not the cause of malaria.

But the easiest explanation is not always the right one. Careful study of the blood of malaria patients proves that the malaria bug can live all winter in the patient's blood, resting, inactive, without causing any symptoms, hibernating, in fact, just like the bear which crawls into a cave in the fall and sleeps snug all winter. In the spring, when all nature awakens and when all forms of life begin to stir and grow, these malaria germs wake up.

What makes the germ which has slept all winter wake up when spring comes? The same thing that makes the grain of wheat, buried in the ground in the fall and lying apparently dead all winter, begin to swell and send up shoots when spring comes.

Sunlight is the source of all growth and life. It has the same stimulating effect on the malaria plant that it does on the wheat plant.

We know much more about sunlight than we used to and can now produce an artificial light very much the same as the natural product. So Doctor Reinhard decided to see if he couldn't, by artificial sunlight, hurry up the development of the sleeping malaria bugs and get them started early enough to cure the patient before the spring malaria season opened. So he exposed his malaria patients to ultraviolet rays and three-fourths of them had a chill in a few days. Then he gave them quinine and so killed the malaria germs about a month in advance. Just like bear hunters who smoke the bear out of his lair and shoot him in midwinter.

Brought up on a Farm

As a young man Dr. Pierce practiced medicine in a rural district and was known far and wide for his great success in alleviating disease. He early moved to Buffalo and put up in ready-to-use form, his Golden Medical Discovery, the well-known tonic for the blood, which is an extract of native roots. This "Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's clears away pimples and annoying eruptions, tends to keep the complexion fresh and clear. It corrects the disordered conditions in a sick stomach, aids digestion, acts as a tonic and enriches the blood. Vim is sure to follow its use. All dealers. Tablets or liquid.

On the Nation's Business

A SLEET storm snaps wires in New England; a blizzard fells a line of poles in the Western ranges; a flood overwhelms a valley community; a prairie cyclone sweeps away everything in its path;—wherever the emergency, men and materials are rushed to the spot in order that telephone service, vitaly important at such a time, may be restored.

And the mending of every break restores to telephone users, everywhere in America, a particular path for the passage of their voices. Whether sudden calamity comes from an Atlantic gale or a Texas "twister," its damage must be repaired at once, because it cripples some part of a communications system that is nation-wide.

Because America has universal service, the telephone truck speeding to a scene of disaster is truly "on the nation's business," and the implements of its workers are weapons wielded in the nation's cause.
